There's no doubt that a well-planned DIY project can be a lot of fun. (After all, there's nothing like coming home to a clean house after a long day at work.) But if you want to be sure that your project comes out right, make sure you get your materials lined up ahead of time and check your plan and your work to be sure you stay on track for completion and a successful project. That means being responsible for the time and effort that goes into your project, and having the right supplies on hand. There's nothing wrong with doing a few things on your own, or asking friends for help. And it's also not only ok to ask for help from professionals or get help from your friends (within reason, of course.) But if you're serious about doing the job yourself, and you're getting started on a project that takes more than a weekend to complete, it's a good idea to start planning what you

1. Technical Field The present disclosure relates to a method of fabricating a light emitting diode (LED) and, more particularly, to a method of fabricating a GaN-based compound semiconductor light emitting diode having increased light extraction efficiency. 2. Description of Related Art GaN-based compound semiconductors are widely used for light emitting diodes (LEDs) due to their high emission efficiency and high direct band gap energy. A GaN-based compound semiconductor LED includes an N-type GaN layer, a P-type GaN layer, an active layer, and a P-type electrode. The active layer includes a multi quantum well (MQW) layer composed of an N-type GaN well and a P-type GaN well, so that electrons and holes can be confined in the wells and recombined to emit light. Since the N-type GaN well has a smaller band gap energy than the P-type GaN well, electrons in the N-type GaN well have a smaller barrier height for energy than electrons in the P-type GaN well, and thus the electrons in the N-type GaN well have a higher mobility than the electrons in the P-type GaN well. That is, the difference in band gap energies between the N-type GaN well and the P-type GaN well produces a potential well structure, so that electrons in the N-type GaN well are more easily confined. Therefore, the N-type GaN well has a higher concentration of electrons than the P-type GaN well. As a result, the LED has a higher electron concentration in the active layer. In a conventional method of fabricating the GaN-based compound semiconductor LED, the P-type electrode is directly formed on the P-type GaN layer. However, electrons in the N-type GaN layer will be excited by the P-type electrode, so that the formed LED has decreased light emission efficiency. Therefore, what is needed is to provide a method of fabricating a GaN-based compound semiconductor light emitting diode that can improve light extraction efficiency.
